

PRESENTS

Following suit ... with Mark Langefeld

It's true. The NDP's favourite spud grower and capitalist Mark Langefeld is back in the game. (Some call it doing business in Saskatchewan.) This time he has a $60 million private-sector stake to build an Ethanol Plant at Lucky Lake - and he has strong views about the role for government.

So, why didn't the Spudco litigants just take their money and run?

Why would a group of outside investors (in Saskatchewan, we call them foreigners) that have already been badly burned by this province want to gamble more of their money here, you ask? Find out when Mark Langefeld shares his subtle and restrained thoughts on his new Wild Horse Bio Ethanol project with the Prairie Policy Centre:
